PERSONAL STATEMENT:
On Practice & Purpose

Peyton Tenso

I'm finishing my Information Systems degree because I have a passion for data creation and organization and implementation of different computer and business processes. My last few years haven't followed a traditional path, but they've shaped how I show up now. I've learned to work with what I have and still produce aretē level results (I built vultureama.com on a phone.)

> "I'm not just looking for a job. I'm looking for a position where I can grow my knowledge, contribute my experience, and build meaningful praxis"

I'm resourceful with limited tools; give me a task, and I'll make it work with what's available. I don't need a perfect setup or a fancy title. I need alignment of my values and work.
I'm not just looking for a job. I'm looking for a position where I can grow my knowledge, contribute my experience, and build meaningful praxis.

What I bring is my cornerstone: I show up.

I care about the work and the people around me, and I stay inquisitive to constantly learn. That's not something I perform; it's my lodestar. If you offer me a place to grow, I will return the investment and make sure to give back tenfold in purpose.
I've been through enough to know that reliability is paramount; it's a choice I make every single day to show up, no matter the precipice I face.

I'm looking for remote work that allows me to show up consistently and strive for superlative work while balancing my personal responsibilities. I have a well behaved, small child who could join me in a quiet office space, if needed.
Before we talk about what I can do for you, I need you to know this about me.My child was conceived through rape. I share that not as an appeal for sympathy, but as an expression of pride and honesty. Parenthood has shaped the way I approach responsibility, resilience, and integrity in my work. It has strengthened my resolve to build environments where people treat each other with respect.
The flexibility for remote work will only increase my focus to strive for and accomplish superlative successes at work.
I'm the person who notices what others miss, navigates hard situations with calmness, and is guided by morality to figure out how to make something work in any environment: the culmination of my character and dedication.

My reliability brings the kind of steadfastness that makes teams grounded and breathe easy.
And I do it all with genuine ethical integrity because that's simply who I am. I know the importance of steadying in loyalty to cultivate trust. I'm not looking for a position to prove I can withstand and then overcome stress. I already know that. I'm here because I would love to work with my community members in an environment that emanates mutual respect.
